EARLY CHILDHOOD EDUCATION: A PROFESSION

For years Early Childhood Educators (including those providing care to school-age children) have been viewed as babysitters. That simply isn't the case. As an early childhood educator you set the foundation for today's youth. Educators can stand proud knowing that you had a hand in teaching our next president of the United States, our next Kindergarten Teacher, Pilot, Army Ranger, etc. Interacting with children, families, and colleagues must always be done in a professional manner. Whether you are an infant and toddler, preschool, or school-age teacher, it is critical to be knowledgeable about and model professional behavior.

Infant, toddler, preschool, and school-age providers play a powerful role in children's lives. Did you know that 95% of children's brain development is complete by the age of 6? That means most of a child's development will take place in your care. Who children become has everything to do with the experiences they have early in their lives, which you as the provider play a huge role in.

High-quality professional standards will strengthen children's development when they are continuously exposed and engaged in meaningful interactions with adults, especially their teachers.

In the field of early childhood education, professionalism encompasses many specific behaviors and skills that address how individuals present themselves to other adults, such as:

- How you present yourself
- Knowledge of the early childhood field
- Quality of your work
- Relationship with other providers
- Your work ethic
- Your attitude

As an individual working with children, youth, and families, you engage in numerous activities that require you to maintain high-quality professional standards. Think about some of the experiences you participate in your daily professional life like:

- Engaging with children
- Interacting with various family dynamics
- Collaborating with other providers
- Interacting with community members

The work you do with children, youth, and their families lay the foundation for healthy development, growth, and success in school and life. Recognition of the significance of the early years on children's development strengthens the desire to strive for excellence when interacting with children, youth, and families.

RESILIENCY TRAINING FOR DIRECTORS – A 2 PART SERIES

Community Resiliency Model: Trauma Informed Care and Mental Wellness (Part 1 of 2)

Providers' mental well-being is the most critical component to nurturing, trauma-informed care. Join us in learning about the Community Resiliency Model: how stress and trauma affect our bodies, how to support ourselves in times of stress, and the first of 6 CRM skills to get us back into our Resilient Zones!

Community Resiliency Model: Mental Wellness with CRM Skills (Part 2 of 2)

Continue diving into the six CRM skills of how to get back to a place of wellbeing so that you can bring your best self to your work and to all aspects of your life. When we have a common language around mental wellness skills, we can help ourselves, our co-workers, and the children in our care. Leave with a plan of growing your resiliency professionally, with all ages of children in your care, and in your agency as a whole.
